CORDOBA MEDICAL INSTITUTE CNA Training Program respects the credibility and trustworthiness of our adult learners and their dedication to pursuing a career in healthcare. Hence, instead of practicing pedagogy, we utilize andragogy for our adult learners.

- Andragogy was initially practiced in 1833 and got fame in teaching methodologies more significantly with the theorist Malcolm Knowles.
- Since adults are self-governed and autonomous, therefore task-oriented instructions are given.
- Various teaching strategies, including case studies, role-playing, self-evaluation, and simulation, allow instructors to adopt the role of facilitator rather than just a lecturer. • The program requires attendance, completion, and submission of assignments, and on top of this, students must be competent in module completion, and satisfactory skills return demonstration.

V. Guidelines for Assessing Mastery of Program Learning Objectives and Competencies 1.

The associate dean and faculty in credit-granting programs may use a variety of methods to assess students' mastery of program learning objectives and competencies, including:

- 1) nationally accepted evaluation strategies and instruments such as those developed by the American Council on Education (A.C.E.), the Council for Adult and Experiential Education (CAEL), the Modern Language Association (M.L.A.), should be used whenever applicable to ensure transferability of awarded credits;

- 2) analysis of non-credit program documents, including program brochures, catalogs, syllabi, textbooks, competency descriptions,
- 3) learning portfolios that describe learning experiences and include representative artifacts or samples of the students' learning;
- 4) competency examinations that require students to demonstrate their knowledge and skills;
- 5) challenge tests or the final exam of a credit-bearing course. If a student passes such an exam at a level preselected by program faculty, the faculty may approve granting of credit for the course;
- 6) vertical credit or a passing grade in a course offered in a structured curricular sequence of courses. If a student receives a passing grade in a course for which other courses are prerequisites or foundational, the appropriate associate dean and faculty may recommend awarding credit for the prerequisite or foundational courses; and
- 7) special topics courses that are designed to allow a student to consolidate and demonstrate non-credit or experiential learning. Based on a student's performance in such a course, the faculty may approve credit for non-credit or experiential learning.

VI. Guidelines for Granting Credit for Learning in Non-credit Programs or Institutions: 1.

For full-program completers

- a) Credit shall be granted following established articulation agreements.
- b) If articulation agreements do not already exist, faculty in the credit-granting program under the direction of the appropriate associate dean and dean shall establish such agreements prior to granting credit by evaluating the scope and content of the learning activities as described in program documents to ensure quality, comparability, and level of intended learning.
- c) Faculty may request syllabi, catalogs, curriculum descriptions, and other materials to be used in the evaluation.

- d) The associate dean and dean shall prepare and approve an articulation agreement that specifies the SLCC courses students shall receive credit based on this evaluation.
2. For partial-program completers
- a) To grant credit to a student who has completed part, but not all, of a formal non credit program, faculty in the credit-granting program under the direction of the appropriate associate dean and dean shall devise suitable methods to assess the student's achievement of course and program learning objectives and competencies and grant ungraded course credit that correspond to the learning objectives and competencies the student has achieved.
